Take the radiator bleed key, you'll need to insert this into the bleed valve. Often the bleed valve (or nipple) is found at the top of the radiator, to the side. It looks like a round hole with a square inside. When you insert the radiator key into the bleed valve, you will feel them lock together.

Bleed plugs can assume a variety of shapes. Some are shaped like square nuts, and the key is simply a socket that fits over the nut connected to a handle. If you lose this type of key, reach for your socket wrench set and choose the socket that fits over the plug. You can also use a spanner or a pair of pliers to turn this type of plug.
